Dear Parents

Normality returns

By midday yesterday a semblance of normality had returned. People were able to walk into nearby Pick'nPay, Woolworths and Spar supermarkets without waiting and parking in parking lots, as well as straight into pharmacies to obtain medicine scripts, without queues. After lessons yesterday, I was able to fill my car with petrol in the afternoon after waiting for about 15 minutes in well-managed queues.

The night passed in silence other than the sound of hundreds of trucks on the highway on their way to restock shops throughout KZN. Doctors rooms and Vets sent messages that their rooms would be open this morning.

I think the article at the following link will provide an interesting perspective:

If it is true then we have much more to be thankful for than we may at first have realised.

Yours faithfully
